An African Fashion Renaissance: Contemporary South African Fashion Design

Over the last few years, contemporary fashion design in South Africa has simply exploded. Rather than following overseas trends, local designers are looking inward and making important creative statements about what it means to be fashionably South African with their take on affordable, local and trendy design.

More than ever before, designers are emerging onto the scene and offering more choice than ever when it comes to affordable, local and trendy design.

During the apartheid era, South African fashion design lagged behind trends in the rest of the world. In a way, this was beneficial as it forced local designers to create their own aesthetics without being overly influenced by what was happening in the rest of the world. Since becoming a democratic nation in 1994, contemporary fashion designers in South Africa have regained a sense of pride. With that has come a renaissance of creativity.

There was a time when South Africans had very little to choose from when it came to contemporary South African fashion design. Chain stores seemed to offer sedate and rather bland clothing and didn't offer many opportunities for local fashion designers.

Eventually fashion retailers like Woolworths grasped that local consumers wanted more choice that was affordable, fashionable and locally made. This led to Woolworths introducing ranges from Craig Native, Stoned Cherrie and Maya Prass into its shops, putting its support behind local design.

zFranchises like The Space sell only contemporary local fashion from designers as diverse as Leigh Schubert, Tart, Sway, Michelle Ludek, Coppella and Amanda Laird Cherry. Big Blue is another contemporary fashion design retailer that sells fun and affordable South Africa fashion.

SOUTH AFRICA HAS SIMPLY EXPLODED

Since YDE (Young Designers Emporium) opened its doors 1995, paving the way for fashion designers to showcase and sell their wares, many others have followed suit. Soweto-based fashionistas Wandi Nzimande and Sechaba Mogale started Loxion Kulca (LK) in 1999. They were arguably the first local fashion designers to bring the fashion style of South Africa's townships to the mass market.

Boutiques Just, Me Me Me, and Mungo and Jemima also stock only local fashion designers. Many designers such as Marion and Lindie, Hermannia Rush, Hip Hop, David Tlale and Black Coffee have their own standalone shops and studios.

WRITE ME A SONG

Maakomele Manaka

Write me a song
About the illusive music
Of a woman's thong
Write me a song
About the hard music
Of a single parent's spinal fluid
Write me a song
About the blind poet
Who sees music in words
Write me a song
About the battered wings of township birds
Swallowed by the emptiness of the sky
Yet live to escape the earth's lie
Write me a song
About the hump and grind
Of a musician's plight
Write me a song
About a ballerina
Who can see the music
And hear the dance
Write me a song
About Azania's forgotten name
Write me a verse
About a woman's shame
Tamed by the lame
Touch of a man's game
Write me a song
Write about the notes
Of dead flutes
And the unfair dirt
On our soldier's boots
Write me a song
About the haunting cries
Of a Khoisan's decaying smile
Write me a symphony
About the soil's history
Cuz how will future scholars
View us
What will they sing
Of our names
Will their lyrics finger our faults?
Write me a lullaby
For my unborn baby
To sleep peaceful tonight
Cuz my flaws
Will soon choke his doors
So write me a song
About a father's shoes
And a mother's barren womb
Cuz I don't want my child to be born in a tomb
Write me a song
About the cruelty
Of the ghetto's depression
Write me out of this chord progression
Cuz I am tired of singing the same song
Write me a poem
About this promised land
Where our cultures have been torn
Cuz we don't belong
So write our names on the sun
For tomorrow's music to shine
Even through the storm
Cuz music is the keeper of a people's time
A place where we were born.
